

Environmental requirements

Whether you are cultivating on a commercial level or at home, there are certain requirements that must be met to create an environment that is conducive for whatever you are growing. The basic requirements necessary to cultivate almost anything would include proper lighting, soil or medium, water, air, and nutrients

Once your environment is set up properly with these essentials, most will experience successful results right away. Further tweaking, or dialing in certain variables, will further results and provide more consistency. Let's examine each component to determine what is necessary to get started.